Let's Start!

Vanessa is waiting for a message ...

Learning Outcome

Exchange information about hypothetical situations in written and spoken interactions according to work and social contexts.

Can Do Statements

- I can discuss coincidences and strange events.
- I can express opinions and beliefs.
- I can talk about real life situations using words like if and when in the present.

Ask your partner:

- What technology do you use for communication?
- What do you think is the best way to communicate?
- Have you ever had miscommunications because of technology? What happened?

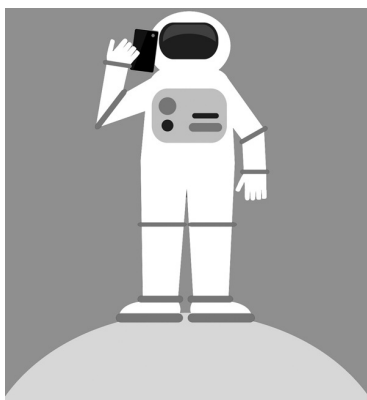

Let's Explore!

Vanessa and Peter have a communication breakdown!

* "A communication breakdown" is a problem with communication.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

- Vanessa: Peter! You're 30 minutes late! What's going on? I'm really upset that you made me wait here all this time.
- Peter: Sorry! When I come downtown I take the number 30 bus. Today there was an accident so the bus had to divert. It took forever to get here in the traffic. That's why I'm late.
- Vanessa: Okay, well, why didn't you let me know? If I am late to meet someone, I send them a text. It's just the courteous thing to do. The reason that you're late is understandable but you need to communicate.
- Peter: But I did send you a text. I sent a text when I realized that the bus was diverting. I sent it about 45 minutes ago.
- Vanessa: I didn't get a text from you.
- Peter: Are you sure? Do you have notifications on? Maybe you got it and you just don't realize that you did.
- Vanessa: Yes, I have notifications on and my phone isn't silenced. If I am waiting to meet someone, I keep my ringer on. I would have heard if I had gotten a text. Maybe you sent it to another Vanessa.
- Peter: Very funny. You're my only Vanessa. Let me check my sent messages. Look. The text, that I sent at 10:45, is right here. It's really strange that you didn't get it.
- Vanessa: That is strange. Look. I got two other texts at the exact time that you sent your text. It's like it's lost in space somewhere. Were you doing anything else on your mobile at the same time? Like downloading an app or watching a video? When my phone is doing many things concurrently, it malfunctions.
- Peter: No. When I send a text, I focus on that.
- Vanessa: Well, you're here now. Let's get a coffee.

Learning Points

The Noun Clause: That-Clause

Noun clauses are groups of words in a sentence referring to a fact. They can sometimes be replaced by a noun or pronoun.

You use the pronoun that to refer to these noun clauses.

For example:

*I know that you didn't mean to do it.

*I know that.

*I'm very disappointed that I didn't get a promotion.

That is why I'm resigning.*

You use noun clauses in certain positions. Look at the chart for details:

Position	Example
After some nouns	His first excuse, that he had woken up late, was untrue.
After some adjectives	I'm very upset that he didn't call or write.

Examples:

- *I'm really upset that you made me wait here all this time.
- That's why I'm late.*
- *The reason that you're late is understandable but you need to communicate.
- The text, that I sent at 10:45, is right here.
- *It's really strange that you didn't get it.

Learning Points

If and When to Talk About Real Life Situations

You use the Present Real Conditional to talk about things you normally do in real-life situations.

You use both if and when in the Present Real Conditional.

If is used when something occurs less often.

If I go to a shopping center, I often buy new shoes.

When gives the impression that something happens regularly.

When I go on holidays, I love to try new dishes.

Notice the structure of this type of conditional:

If / When ... Simple Present ..., ... Simple Present ...

Look at the examples from the text:

Examples:

- When I come downtown I take the number 30 bus.
- If I am late to meet someone, I send them a text.
- If I am waiting to meet someone, I keep my ringer on.
- When my phone is doing many things concurrently, it malfunctions.
- When I send a text, I focus on that.
